Opening for a Post Doctoral Research Position

The Social Intervention Group (SIG) at Columbia University is seeking applicants for a postdoctoral research position beginning Summer 2018. The postdoctoral researchers will receive mentorship and experience working with interdisciplinary researchers as they pursue extramurally-funded domestic or international research projects related to HIV, substance use, violence, criminal justice settings and populations, and implementation science. Early career scientists seeking to apply, develop, and/or test more sophisticated and new quantitative analytical methods particularly are encouraged to apply. The postdoctoral researcher may receive up to three years of support.

Candidates should hold a doctoral-level degree in the social sciences or a related field. Strong statistical skills, documented experience in secondary analysis, and a record of peer-reviewed publications are highly preferred qualifications.

Ideal candidates will have a background or interest in HIV, substance use, violence, criminal justice settings and populations, and/or implementation science.

All applicants must apply by 1 August 2018.

Please submit the following materials to aw2671@columbia.edu with the subject line: SIG Postdoctoral Research Position
