

Kathleen Sykes is the Senior Advisor for Aging and Sustainability, U.S. EPA's Office of Research and Development. She Reports to the Deputy Assistant Administrator and serves as an EPA designee for the National Prevention Council and for the Interagency Forum on Aging-related Statistics and Social indicators. Ms. Sykes mentors Health and Aging Policy fellows and has also presented on national environmental health issues as they relate across the lifespan and for older adults. She has served on the steering committee for Healthy Environments Across Generations "unconference" held June 2012 in New York City. Ms. Sykes also writes articles related to environmental health and aging and the built environment and for the monthly e-newsletter on aging and sustainability that reaches approximately 10,000 subscribers. In addition to all of this, she also manages annual arts and environment intergenerational Rachel Carson Contest.